Part 1: How I would stop the no-shows

The problem in one line: one in four clients doesn't turn up, and she only finds out when she's sitting there waiting. That is an empty slot she could have given to someone else.

Most people don't skip on purpose. They forget, or something comes up and cancelling feels awkward. So I would fix forgetting and awkwardness first, because that is cheap and works for most people.

What I would do

1. Remind them on WhatsApp, and ask for a reply. She already runs everything on WhatsApp, so I would not ask her to learn a new tool. One message the day before and one a couple of hours before: "Your consultation is tomorrow at 4 pm. Reply YES to confirm, or tap here to reschedule." Replying takes two seconds.
2. Find out early, not at the door. If someone hasn't confirmed a few hours before, she sees it on her list. She can send one more nudge, or offer that slot to someone on a waiting list. A cancellation she hears about early is a slot she can still fill.
3. Make leaving easier than ghosting. Every message carries a one-tap reschedule link. If cancelling takes ten seconds and no explanation, people will cancel instead of vanishing.
4. A small refundable deposit, only for repeat offenders. If someone has already missed once, ask for a small deposit on their next booking, refunded when they show up. I would not ask everyone, because it puts new clients off.
5. Keep score. Mark every visit as Done or No-show. Then she can see her real no-show rate and who keeps missing, instead of guessing.

Why this order: reminders and easy rescheduling cost almost nothing and fix most of the problem. The deposit is stronger but has a cost in goodwill, so it comes last and only where it is needed.

What I built toward this: clients confirm with one tap in the app. Her dashboard shows who has confirmed and who hasn't, warns her about clients who have missed before, shows her no-show rate, and has a button that opens a ready-written WhatsApp reminder.